

We concluded that the products mentioned apparently release favorable physiological reactions in the plants that lead to a larger functional foliage area per leaf, a greater number of functional leaves; both leading to larger and higher quality yields. This preliminary results will serve as the basis for a second phase a research which will incorporate these and other new products in a comparative study with conventional chemical treatments to determinate if commercial use of these alternative products is feasible.